

ABOUT ME

Hi, I'm Denise! I run my own company, Epiphany Planning & Development, providing training in communications, supervision, along with a myriad of workforce engagement training and tools including Predictive Index, Franklin Covey, etc. My clients have included big companies like General Mills, and everything in between right down to small startups. Every now and then I teach at a university for a semester or two and have taught at BGSU (Intro Public Administration and Intro to American Government), Trine (International Business), and Bluffton University (Leadership).

I've worked in economic development and workforce development for a couple of decades and have been fortunate enough to sit on dozens of boards and have even won awards for it. Also, I'm much more fun than this introduction makes me seem.

I have a Master's degree in Public Administration, and have never stopped learning which results in ongoing new certifications from multiple universities including Northwestern, Stanford University, and others. I truly enjoy people and love seeing people flourish engaging in what they want to do, so learning all I can to help them get and feel connected, along with achieve their goals is what drives me.

I've lived all over including the East Coast, West Coast, and throughout the Midwest, but grew up for the most part in northwest Ohio, Bryan. My first job ever was at Dairy Queen in Bryan and it was epic! When I'm not working, I'm often out hiking somewhere, or if it's baseball season watching the Cleveland Guardians win.
